“ I have a somewhat curious mind and I teach high school kids genetics. I say that because at times I will meet people and wonder if they have a genetic defect. I have often wondered that about Leonard in that I wonder if his genetic defect did not allow him to stop smiling and laughing. From my earliest childhood memories to adulthood, I honestly never remember a moment with him when he was not smiling and laughing! Just being around him made me want to smile, you had to, it kind of rubbed off on ya'. I see that same quality in his granddaughter Erin. I just want you all to know that my memories of your husband, dad or grandpa are happy memories . He was and always will be a very special kind of guy to me that loved to laugh and make those around him laugh. I mean i know I am not that funny so my time with him where he made me smile was second nature to him. God's speed to you all and I will bet right now my dad and Leonard are having a lot of laughs catching up. God bless you all.

“ Leonard was my dad’s first cousin but felt more like an Uncle to me given his close relationship to my dad, Arnold, and my Uncle Warren. His parents lived across the street from my grandparents Jake and Esther in Ackley so I have fond memories of both of them. My brother Matt and I would be excited to run over there every time we visited to be welcomed by Aunt Flo’s smile and sit on the floor while Uncle Ern spun tales about the monkey that allegedly lived in the attic but had always just left to visit some exotic place just before we arrived. Leonard had the same twinkle in his eye and mischievous nature as his dad so it was extra special to share memories with him of those special days. Both Leonard and Marlene were always warm and engaging with me and brought us closer to the Oelmann side of our family. He was known for his smiles and jokes but he also had a serious side and would always share with me something thought provoking to reflect on later. I’ll miss him and certainly want to send my condolences to Marlene, Deb, Brad and his greater family.

*May He Rest in Peace,
